QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

1. Whether, consistent with this Court's holding in Murdock v. Pennsylvania, a municipality may impose a flat, fifty-dollar-per-vendor license fee as a precondition to the sidewalk distribution of political and religious "street" newspapers?

2. Whether the First Amendment permits the imposition of a flat, fifty-dollar-per-vendor license fee as a precondition to the sidewalk distribution of political and religious "street" newspapers, even where it is undisputed that Petitioners are either homeless persons or indigent proselytizers for the Nation of Islam who cannot afford to pay the fee, and the licensing scheme that imposes the fee is bereft of an indigency exception?

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Petitioners respectfully request that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment and opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit in this proceeding.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, review of which is sought by this petition, is reported as Northeast Ohio Coalition for the Homeless v. City of Cleveland, 105 F.3d 1107 (6th Cir. 1997) (hereinafter, "the Opinion"). It is reprinted in the appendix to this petition at page App. 1. The Opinion reversed a decision by the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, which had granted Petitioners' request for injunctive relief. The District Court's opinion is reported at 885 F. Supp. 1029 (N.D. Ohio 1995); it is reprinted at App. 12.

The Sixth Circuit's unpublished order of April 10, 1997, denying Petitioners' request for rehearing and suggestion for rehearing en banc, is reprinted at App. 25.

JURISDICTION

The Sixth Circuit's Opinion was issued on February 3, 1997. See App. 1. Petitioners timely filed a Petition for Rehearing and Suggestion for Rehearing En Banc, which the Sixth Circuit denied on April 10, 1997. See App. 25. This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. section 1254(1).

THE CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS AT ISSUE

Constitution of the United States, Amendment I:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Constitution of the United States, Amendment XIV, Section 1:

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

THE ORDINANCE AT ISSUE

The provisions of Chapter 675 of the Codified Ordinances of Cleveland, Ohio are reprinted in the appendix to this petition, commencing at App. 26. Among those provisions, section 675.02(c)(3) is the specific target of this First Amendment challenge. It imposes "an annual license fee of fifty dollars" (App. 29), which must be paid by all who engage in "peddling" (App. 28). "Peddling" is defined as:

> selling, bartering, or offering or exposing for sale or barter any goods, wares, merchandise, > menial tasks, such as painting numbers on curbs, food or beverages from, in, upon, along, or through the highways, streets, or sidewalks of the City, or in the open air or from a temporary shelter or vending device upon private property in the City.

Codified Ordinances of Cleveland, Ohio, section 675.01(a)(2) (App. 26-27).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This is a case about the power of municipalities to erect steep cost barriers to the sidewalk distribution of political and religious "street"[1] newspapers. Petitioners

[1] The sidewalk sale of "street" newspapers is a growing phenomenon in American cities. See Larry Dum, Papers for Homeless Offer Needy a Leg Up, N.Y. Times, March 31, 1997, at D7. There are now more than 70 such newspapers in communities of all sizes nationwide. Id. Most of them have an editorial focus on homelessness – and are sold by the homeless as a means of maintaining their individual sustenance. See Hillary Chura, Homeless Newspapers Help Two Ways: Publications Inform Street People and Also Employ Them to Sell the Newspapers, Austin American-Statesman, Sept. 28, 1996, at D2; Jon Anderson, Homeless Press Grows with Need; Publications' Base Expands with Poor, Chicago Tribune, Aug. 19, 1996, at B1; Don Jacobson, Street Newspapers Band Together, United Press International, Aug. 18, 1996; James L. Tyson, Self-Sufficiency is Measure of Chicago Newspaper's Success, Christian Science Monitor, April 11, 1996, at A3; Tim Jones, Reader Guilt, Vendor Talent Propel Paper; Streetwise Becomes Nation's Largest Street Publication Aiding Homeless, Chicago Tribune, Oct. 2, 1995, at C1; Chad Rubel, Papers Sold by Northeast Ohio Coalition for the Homeless ("NEOCH"), Richard Clements, Fruit of Islam of Muhammad's Mosque No. 18 ("Fruit of Islam"), and Steven D. Hill seek Supreme Court review of the Opinion below because it leaves street newspapers vulnerable to regulatory eradication.

The material facts are undisputed.[2]

NEOCH is a non-profit advocacy group for the homeless. It publishes a newspaper known as The Homeless Grapevine, which is distributed exclusively by homeless and destitute people. NEOCH's purpose in publishing the Grapevine is twofold: to publicize the plight of the homeless, and to provide homeless persons with a vehicle for maintaining their individual sustenance. Those who distribute the Grapevine obtain copies from NEOCH for ten cents apiece. They distribute the newspaper on public sidewalks, offering it to passers-by Homeless Reach for Wider Audience, Marketing News, Sept. 25, 1995, at 12.

The Final Call, a newspaper that disseminates the religious and political views of Minister Louis Farrakhan and the Nation of Islam, is likewise sold on public sidewalks in major cities nationwide. Paul Shepard, Final Call Sales Force Driving Legal Debate; Police May Ticket the Nation's News Vendors, but Islam Leaders Say They'll Stay on the Streets, (Cleveland) Plain Dealer, Dec. 25, 1995, at B1.

for a suggested donation of one dollar each. The distributors retain all proceeds received in this fashion. 885 F. Supp. at 1030 (App. at 13).

Fruit of Islam is a non-profit membership organization affiliated with the Nation of Islam. Its members disseminate the Nation of Islam's political and religious message by selling a newspaper known as The Final Call. Copies are sold on public sidewalks for one dollar apiece. Fruit of Islam members retain only thirty cents per copy; they remit the remainder to their mosque. Since they must also donate fifty dollars per month to the mosque, Fruit of Islam members earn only a subsistence living by distributing the paper. 885 F. Supp. at 1030 (App. at 13-14).

Respondent City of Cleveland ("the City") requires all "peddlers" to secure a permit, obtainable only through advance payment of a fifty-dollar fee.[3] Grapevine and Final Call distributors are financially unable to pay this fee, and NEOCH cannot afford to procure licenses for its distributors.[4] If the City persists in enforcing the challenged ordinance, NEOCH will be unable to distribute its newspaper in Cleveland. 885 F. Supp. at 1030-31 (App. at 14).

[3] Codified Ordinances of Cleveland, section 675.02(c)(3), App. at 29.

[4] As the District Court observed: "Cleveland does not dispute that the Coalition's and the Mosque's individual distributors are unable to afford the license fee, nor does the city dispute that the Coalition cannot afford to procure a license on behalf of all its distributors." 885 F. Supp. at 1034 (App. at 22).

Richard Clements and Steven Hill – Grapevine and Final Call distributors, respectively – have each been arrested at least once for "peddling" their newspapers without the required license. Mr. Hill, in fact, has been prosecuted several times for violating the challenged ordinance. 885 F. Supp. at 1031 (App. at 14).

To identify the "administrative costs" associated with its licensing system, the City offered only one piece of evidence – an expense list that accounts for only forty-three of the fifty dollars it collects per permit:

Application Process:	$ 7.64
Supervisory Costs:	$26.74
License Issuance:	$ 2.25
Miscellaneous Paper Costs:	$ .28
Annual Field Maintenance:	$ 6.09
TOTAL:	$43.00

The City offered no further explanation of the costs associated with its licensing system. 885 F. Supp. at 1031 (App. at 14).

On May 3, 1995, the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Ohio granted Petitioners' request for injunctive relief. It held that the City, by enforcing its license fee against Grapevine and Final Call distributors, was in violation of the First Amendment. App. at 12. On February 3, 1997, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit reversed. App. at 1. Petitioners timely filed a Petition for Rehearing and Suggestion for Rehearing En Banc, which the Sixth Circuit denied on April 10, 1997. App. at 25.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT OF CERTIORARI

By upholding the imposition of a flat, fifty-dollar-per-vendor license fee as a precondition to the sidewalk distribution of political and religious "street" newspapers, the Sixth Circuit has flouted 54 years of First Amendment precedent – including this Court's controlling decisions in Murdock v. Pennsylvania[5] and Follett v. Town of McCormick.[6] Time and time again in American history, municipalities have employed such license fees to discourage sidewalk sales of newspapers, books, and pamphlets by a veritable Who's Who of unpopular groups: Jehovah's Witnesses,[7] Black Panthers,[8] anti-war

Supp. 582 (S.D. Ohio 1941) (rejecting – under the First Amendment – the application of a license fee to door-to-door sales of religious literature by Jehovah's Witnesses).

[8] Hull v. Petrillo, 439 F.2d 1184, 1185-86 (2d Cir. 1971) (recognizing that city could not constitutionally apply its peddler's license fee to sidewalk sales of the Black Panther Party's newspaper – to do so would offend the First Amendment).

activists,[9] Socialists,[10] and Christian Fundamentalists.[11] Time and time again over the past six decades, courts have declared these enforcement efforts unconstitutional.[12]

This case is no different than the foregoing disputes; only the unpopular groups have changed. Targeted for suppression here are the twin pariahs of the Nineties: the homeless and the Nation of Islam. Their fate should have been no different than that of their predecessors. But the Sixth Circuit flouted Murdock's mandate. Its Opinion is literally unprecedented: Neither the Sixth Circuit nor the City has managed to cite a single case upholding the application of a peddler's license fee as a precondition to the sidewalk distribution of printed matter.

Lodico*, 11 Ohio St. 2d 135, 228 N.E.2d 325 (1967) (rejecting – under both the First Amendment and Article I, section 11 of the Ohio Constitution – the application of a peddler's license fee to sidewalk sales of Young Socialist magazine, because city official possessed unfettered discretion in issuing the license and because imposition of the fee constituted an impermissible prior restraint).

[11] City of Cincinnati v. Mosier, 61 Ohio App. 81, 22 N.E.2d 418 (1939) (rejecting – under both the First Amendment and Article I, section 11 of the Ohio Constitution – the application of a peddler's license fee to sidewalk sales of religious literature). Accord: *Holy Spirit Association for the Unification of World Christianity v. [12] See supra footnotes 5-11.

To reach the desired result, they rely instead on strands of precedent that feature very different facts and far more lenient levels of First Amendment scrutiny: cases upholding the regulation of parades[13] and charitable solicitations.[14] By invoking these alien precedents as if they were no less applicable than Murdock, the Opinion imports a new and far more deferential standard for gauging precisely the type of license fee that Murdock itself condemned:

> The lesson to be gleaned from Cox and Murdock is that an ordinance requiring a person to pay a license or permit fee before he can engage in a constitutionally protected activity does not violate the Constitution so long as the purpose of charging the fee is limited to defraying expenses incurred in furtherance of a legitimate state interest.

Ct. 275 (1991)). We will demonstrate that parade cases are entirely inapplicable to this dispute; see infra footnotes 20-24 and accompanying text.

[14] See App. at 8-9 (relying on Dayton Area Visually Impaired Persons, Inc. v. Fisher, 70 F.3d 1474 (6th Cir. 1995), cert. denied, 116 S. Ct. 1421 (1996)). The "compelling governmental interest in preventing fraudulent solicitations," 105 F.3d at 1110 (App. 8), has no place in the context of street newspapers. In exchange for one dollar, those who purchase The Homeless Grapevine and The Final Call get what they pay for: publications with distinctive editorial voices. To the extent that government may insinuate itself into these transactions in the name of rooting out "fraud," it may just as likely be on an undeclared mission to stamp out dissent.

App. at 7-8. In one fell swoop, the Opinion blurs Cox and Murdock, setting aside Murdock's prohibition against flat fees imposed as a precondition to sidewalk expression and replacing it with Cox's far more lenient test for parade permits. Thus, even while paying lip service to Murdock, the Opinion consigns it to oblivion. And it does so while studiously avoiding the salient question of the fee's affordability – on a record in which even the City concedes that Petitioners cannot afford to pay its fifty-dollar-per-vendor assessment.

There are four independently sufficient grounds for granting this request for a writ of certiorari:

I. The Opinion contradicts controlling Supreme Court authority – and, if left undisturbed, will cast grave doubt on Murdock's continued vitality.

II. The Opinion creates an irreconcilable conflict in the circuits.

III. The Opinion erects unprecedented barriers to sidewalk speech by upholding the instant fee on a record in which it is undisputed that Petitioners cannot afford to pay the fee, and the licensing scheme that imposes the fee is bereft of an indigency exception.

IV. Across this country, more than seventy cities have "street" newspapers like those at issue here. By paving the way for their eradication, the Opinion has prompted a free speech conflict of national dimensions.

We will address each of these four grounds in turn.

I. By Holding that Municipalities May Impose a Flat, Fifty-Dollar-Per-Vendor License Fee as a Precondition to the Sidewalk Distribution of Political and Religious "Street" Newspapers, the Opinion Flouts Fifty Years of First Amendment Precedent – Including this Court's Controlling Decision in Murdock v. Pennsylvania.

Starting with this Court's seminal decision in Murdock v. Pennsylvania,[15] American courts have consistently held that a city cannot impose a flat license fee as a precondition to exercising the First Amendment right to disseminate ideas on public sidewalks.[16] The Opinion upholds precisely the type of fee that Murdock condemned (a flat license fee), in precisely the same context (as a precondition to expression), barring precisely the same medium (the printed word) in precisely the same forum (a public sidewalk). It is objectionable enough that the Opinion ignores Murdock; but the Opinion also ignores the fact that this Court recently reaffirmed the very aspect of Murdock on which Petitioners rely.[17]

[15] 319 U.S. 105 (1943) (rejecting – under the First Amendment – the application of a peddler's license fee to sidewalk and house-to-house sales of religious literature by Jehovah's Witnesses). Accord: Follett v. Town of McCormick, 321 U.S. 573 (1944) (rejecting – under the First Amendment – the application of a peddler's license fee to sidewalk and house-to-house sales of religious literature by Jehovah's Witnesses).

[16] See supra footnotes 5-11.

[17] Jimmy Swaggert Ministries v. Board of Equalization, 493 U.S. 378, 387 (1990) (observing that the constitutional flaw in the Murdock and Follett ordinances was that, by imposing a flat license tax "as a precondition" to the exercise of First Amendment freedoms, "they operated as prior restraints") (emphasis in original).

What Murdock condemned, what this Court still condemns,[18] and what the Opinion inexplicably upholds is choking off sidewalk expression in advance by making its exercise preconditioned on the payment of a flat license fee. See Murdock, 319 U.S. at 112 (condemning the imposition of "a flat license tax, the payment of which is a condition of the exercise of these constitutional privileges") (emphasis added). Accord: Follett, 321 U.S. at 577 ("The exaction of a tax as a condition to the exercise of the great liberties guaranteed by the First Amendment is as obnoxious as the imposition of a censorship or a previous restraint.") (citations omitted; emphasis added). Such a regulatory scheme restrains First Amendment freedoms in advance and "inevitably tends to suppress their exercise." Murdock, 319 U.S. at 114. It therefore offends one of the core purposes of the First Amendment:

> The taxes imposed by this ordinance can hardly help but be as severe and telling in their impact on the freedom of the press . . . as the "taxes on knowledge" at which the First Amendment was partly aimed.

Id. at 114-15.

Since there is no meaningful difference between the licensing scheme in Murdock and the one at issue here, and since both schemes share a constitutional flaw that is still recognized by this Court, the Opinion's failure to follow Murdock is insupportable. Accordingly, this Court should either grant review of the Opinion or summarily reverse it.[19]

[19] Whether or not the instant newspapers are "sold" to passers-by is irrelevant for First Amendment purposes. The fact that a publication is sold rather than given away does not diminish its First Amendment protection. Murdock, 319 U.S. at 111; City of Bowling Green v. Lodico, 11 Ohio St. 2d 135, 138, 140, 228 N.E.2d 325 (1967); Gall v. Lawler, 322 F. Supp. 1223, 1225 (E.D. Wis. 1971). "It should be remembered," observed this Court, "that the pamphlets of Thomas Paine were not distributed free of charge." Murdock, 319 U.S. at 111.

Nor is the constitutionality of the ordinance saved by the fact that it regulates hot dog vendors and newspaper distributors alike. Murdock, 319 U.S. at 115; Gall, 322 F. Supp. at 1225. In striking down the application of a peddler's license fee to sidewalk sales of an "underground" newspaper, the Gall court observed:

> Insofar as the ordinance applies to First Amendment rights, it is fatally overbroad. The licensing provision of the ordinance, which might properly apply to a transient vacuum cleaner salesman, becomes constitutionally offensive when it is applied to the distribution of ideas.

322 F. Supp. at 1225. Accord: Murdock, 319 U.S. at 115 ("A license tax certainly does not acquire constitutional validity because it classifies the privileges protected by the First Amendment along with the wares and merchandise of hucksters and peddlers and treats them all alike. Freedom of press, freedom of speech, freedom of religion are in a preferred position.").

A. In rejecting Murdock, the Opinion relies heavily on a line of cases that Murdock itself distinguished.

Consigning Murdock to oblivion, the Opinion relies instead on parade cases[20] – even though Murdock itself distinguished parades from sidewalk expression,[21] and even though the same distinction is made by the very parade cases that appear in the Opinion.[22] Indeed, both of the Opinion's parade cases turn in part on the recognition that disappointed parade applicants may always avail themselves of the sidewalk.[23] Thus, the Opinion uses parade cases to justify heightened barriers to sidewalk speech, even though those very precedents assume that public sidewalks will remain freely accessible to prospective speakers.[24]

[23] See supra footnote 22.

[24] See, e.g., Stonewall Union, 931 F.2d at 1137 ("[I]n the present case, an alternative forum is available – the Columbus sidewalks which parallel the streets are free for purposes of conducting a parade. . . . ") (emphasis added); id. (describing

B. Left undisturbed, the Opinion will cast grave doubt on Murdock's continued vitality.

If the Opinion stands, what is left of Murdock? To what set of facts does it apply, if not to ours? Does it serve now only to protect Jehovah's Witnesses? In rural Pennsylvania?

This case involves – as did Murdock – the application of a peddler's licensing scheme to sidewalk expression, imposed in the form of a flat fee, and exacted as a precondition to the sidewalk distribution of printed matter. Any factual dissimilarity between these cases is, from a First Amendment perspective, utterly trivial. Thus, the Sixth Circuit's refusal to treat Murdock as directly controlling is an affront to Murdock's continued vitality. To dispel the impression that Murdock is effectively overruled, this Court should grant the instant petition.

II. The Opinion Creates an Irreconcilable Conflict in the Circuits.

The Opinion's holding stands in sharp contrast to the Second Circuit's decision in Hull v. Petrillo, 439 F.2d 1184, 1185-86 (2d Cir. 1971) – thereby creating a conflict in the federal circuits that justifies Supreme Court review.

In Hull, the Second Circuit was confronted with a First Amendment controversy effectively identical to the instant case. At issue was the power of a municipality to impose a flat, fifteen-dollar-per-vendor peddler's license sidewalks and parks as "a constitutionally acceptable alternative for indigent paraders").

fee as a precondition to the sidewalk sale of the Black Panther Party's newspaper. 439 F.2d at 1185. Properly invoking Murdock, the Second Circuit concluded that the city could not constitutionally apply its peddler's license fee to sidewalk sales of the Black Panther publication – to do so would offend the First Amendment. Id. at 1185-86.[25] In diametrical opposition to the Sixth Circuit's Opinion, the Second Circuit observed:

> [A]ny fee imposed as a prerequisite to the exercise of the right to communicate ideas on the public sidewalks is an unconstitutional prior restraint upon the freedom of expression.

Id. at 1186 (emphasis added). The foregoing quote is entirely consistent with this Court's recent reaffirmation of Murdock and Follett in Jimmy Swaggert Ministries v. Board of Equalization, 493 U.S. 378, 387 (1990) (observing that the constitutional flaw in the Murdock and Follett ordinances was that, by imposing a flat license tax "as a precondition" to the exercise of First Amendment freedoms, "they operated as prior restraints") (emphasis in original).

[25] Accord: Bery v. City of New York, 97 F.3d 689 (2d Cir. 1996) (striking down, under the First Amendment, the enforcement of a municipal regulation prohibiting visual artists from selling their works in public places without a general vendors license) (by imposing a numerical cap on the availability of such licenses, leaving a long list of individuals who were thus effectively barred from engaging in sidewalk expression, the regulation did not meet the First Amendment's "narrowly tailored" requirement, nor did it leave open ample alternative channels of communication), cert. denied, 65 U.S.L.W. 3798 (U.S. 1997).

Since the Opinion creates an irreconcilable conflict between the Sixth and Second Circuits on an important First Amendment question, this Court should grant Petitioners' request for a writ of certiorari.

III. The Opinion Erects Unprecedented Barriers to Sidewalk Speech by Upholding the Instant Fee in the Face of these Undisputed Facts: Petitioners Are Either Homeless Persons or Indigent Proselytizers for the Nation of Islam Who Cannot Afford to Pay the Fee, and the Licensing Scheme that Imposes the Fee is Bereft of an Indigency Exception.

The Opinion treats the challenged fee as a legitimate time, place, or manner regulation – even though it is really a forum-access admission price, one that makes the exercise of First Amendment freedoms contingent on one's ability to pay. Here, the Opinion willfully ignores the most important fact in the case (an undisputed fact, at that): namely, that Petitioners cannot afford the flat fee imposed by the City.[26] By leaving this critical fact out of its analysis, and by ignoring the whole question of affordability, the Opinion gives local government carte blanche to raise forum-access fees. In the analysis employed by the Opinion, the upward growth of such fees is limited only by the administrative cost estimates that are offered to support them. The Opinion even indulges a vague reference to inflation as supporting an otherwise inexplicable gap between the City's estimate and its fee.[27]

Speech regulations that impose steep barriers of affordability have been constitutionally suspect for more than fifty years. As this Court observed in Murdock, the state may not impose a charge for the enjoyment of a right granted by the Constitution;[28] nor may it render the exercise of a constitutional right contingent on one's ability to pay.[29] As the Second Circuit observed in Hull v. Petrillo:

> The ability to pay is not a legitimate criterion for the state to employ in determining who is to express his views on its streets and who is not.[30]

This is especially critical when the issue is access to the sidewalk – the last bastion of free expression for impoverished speakers. In upholding a fifty-dollar fee for access to the sidewalk, the Sixth Circuit cites its own decision in Stonewall Union v. City of Columbus, 931 F.2d [27] See the District Court's opinion, 885 F. Supp. at 1031 (App. at 14), where the judge notes that the City's administrative costs are substantially less – in fact, 14% less – than the fee it actually imposes. Though the City explains this disparity as inevitably justified by rising costs, it would be odd indeed if an otherwise unconstitutional permit fee could be redeemed by the happenstance of inflation.

Thus, the Opinion contradicts the very Sixth Circuit decision on which it places the greatest reliance.

The Opinion is especially offensive to free speech principles because, in upholding steep cost barriers to sidewalk expression, it does so on a record in which the City concedes that Petitioners cannot pay the required fee.[32] By subjecting these particular newspapers to the City's license fee, the Opinion paves the way for their demise. This is because the Grapevine is distributed exclusively by homeless and destitute individuals;[33] when directed at them, the fifty-dollar fee might just as well be a flat prohibition against distributing the newspaper at all. Likewise, The Final Call is distributed exclusively by young Fruit of Islam members who, just like the Jehovah's Witnesses in Murdock,[34] keep only a fraction of their sales proceeds, turn over most of their money to the Mosque, and therefore maintain only a subsistence living.[35] Since a peddler's license is beyond the reach of the very people who distribute these newspapers, their circulation is gravely threatened by the enforcement of this licensing scheme.

From a First Amendment perspective, thwarting a paper's distribution is no different than halting its publication:

> [An] ordinance cannot be saved because it relates to distribution and not to publication. Liberty of circulating is as essential to [First Amendment] freedom as liberty of publishing; indeed, without the circulation, the publication would be of little value.

exception for indigent speakers;[36] but the ordinance here is bereft of an indigency exception.[37]

By ignoring the foregoing authorities, and by ignoring the record before it, the Sixth Circuit has erected unprecedented barriers of cost to sidewalk expression. Accordingly, its Opinion should be subjected to Supreme Court review.[38] because the fee serves almost exclusively to defray nothing more than the cost of its own collection. Referring to the City's own cost breakdown (App. at 14), only a small portion of the fifty-dollar license fee – the $6.09 spent on "Annual Field Maintenance" – seems to be linked in any way to the regulation of the secondary effects of expression. The bulk of the costs involved – for the application process ($7.64), unspecified "Supervisory Costs" ($26.74), and license issuance ($2.25) – seem related only to the cost of issuing the license itself. And despite the fact that the fee totals fifty dollars, Cleveland can at best account for only forty-three dollars of its use (App. at 14), asserting in passing that the disparity between what is collected and what is spent by now must have closed with rising costs. Respondent's Sixth Circuit Brief at 5. It would be odd indeed if an otherwise unconstitutional permit fee could be redeemed by the happenstance of inflation. But it should take more than inflation to save Cleveland's fee. Even assessed in the most charitable light, as a restriction reasonably related to the administrative cost of policing the harm it seeks to regulate, the permit fee in question is – even by the City's own reckoning – larger than the sum of the nebulous costs it is alleged to cover, and the vast majority of the money collected is in no way directed to "the problems with which the police power of the state is free to deal." Murdock, 319 U.S. at 116. Accordingly, the District Court correctly held the fee to be unrelated to any legitimate purpose, and justified solely as a means of supporting the mechanism of its own collection.

Islam.[40] Indeed, more than seventy[41] American cities have street newspapers like those at issue here. If the Opinion is left undisturbed by this Court, municipalities across the country will be armed with a potent new weapon for eradicating such newspapers. Since they are distributed solely on public sidewalks and solely by indigent people, street newspapers are particularly vulnerable to the sort of pre-distribution license fee that the Opinion upholds – especially because, in the Opinion's wake, such fees may be imposed regardless of their affordability.[42] distribution of political and religious "street" newspapers. By holding otherwise, the Sixth Circuit has simply refused to follow this Court's controlling decision in Murdock v. Pennsylvania. Its Opinion is all the more offensive to the First Amendment – and all the more threatening to "street" newspapers generally – because the Sixth Circuit upheld the fee on a record that contains these undisputed facts: The newspapers here are distributed either by homeless persons or indigent proselytizers for the Nation of Islam who cannot afford to pay the fee, and the licensing scheme that imposes the fee is bereft of an indigency exception.

Given the broad proliferation of street newspapers and the regulatory choke-hold to which the Opinion subjects them, this case presents a First Amendment controversy of national dimensions. Accordingly, this Court should grant Petitioners' request for a writ of certiorari.

Accordingly, Petitioners request that this Court either grant their petition for a writ of certiorari or summarily reverse the ruling below.

NORTHEAST OHIO COALITION FOR THE HOMELESS, et al., Plaintiffs-Appellees,

v.

CITY OF CLEVELAND, Defendant-Appellant.

Nos. 95-3665, 95-4016
United States Court of Appeals,
Sixth Circuit.

Argued Sept. 23, 1996.
Decided Feb. 3, 1997.

Nonprofit organizations brought declaratory judgment action against city challenging constitutionality of city ordinance requiring payment of $50 license fee for all peddlers within city. The United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Ann Aldrich, J., 885 F.Supp. 1029, enjoined enforcement of ordinance. City appealed. The Court of Appeals, Alan E. Norris, Circuit Judge, held that license fee imposed by city ordinance requiring street peddlers to register with city was not impermissible prior restraint of speech under First Amendment or Ohio Constitution.

Reversed and remanded.

Before: NORRIS, SUHRHEINRICH, and BATCHELDER, Circuit Judges.

ALAN E. NORRIS, Circuit Judge.

In this consolidated appeal, defendant, the City of Cleveland, challenges the district court's order granting summary judgment to plaintiffs, the Northeast Ohio Coalition for the Homeless ("Coalition"), Richard Clements, Fruit of Islam of Muhammad's Mosque No. 18 ("Mosque"), and Steven D. Hill, and permanently enjoining the enforcement of a City of Cleveland ordinance requiring all peddlers to pay a license fee. The city also challenges the district court's subsequent order awarding attorney's fees to plaintiffs pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1988. For the following reasons, we reverse both of the district court's orders and remand with instructions to enter summary judgment in favor of the city.

I.

Plaintiffs bring this action pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, he [sic] free speech provision of the Ohio Constitution, Ohio Const, art. I, § 11, and the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. §§ 2201-2202. They challenge the constitutionality of a Cleveland ordinance regulating peddling on public property. The material facts of the case are not in dispute. Cleveland Codified Ordinance § 675.02(a) requires that every person who engages in peddling anywhere in the city be in possession of a peddler's license.[1] Section 675.02(c)(3) states that each

[1] The ordinance defines "peddling" broadly to include "selling, bartering, or offering or exposing for sale or barter any goods, wares, merchandise, menial tasks, such as painting numbers on curbs, food or beverages from, in, upon, along, or through the highways, streets, or sidewalks of the City, or in the open air or from a temporary shelter or vending device upon private property in the City." See § 675.01(a)(2).

applicant for such a license must pay an annual fee of fifty dollars to cover the expenses incident to processing the application and supervising the licensee. In return for the fee, each applicant receives the license itself, containing his name and address, a detailed description of the goods he is authorized to sell, and a license number and expiration date, as well as a laminated identification card containing his photograph. See § 675.03(a)-(b). Section 675.03(a) states that the peddler must wear the identification card and carry the license on his person whenever he is engaged in peddling. In 1989, the cost to the city of administering the licensing program was forty-three dollars per license issued.

The Coalition is a nonprofit organization dedicated to addressing the needs of homeless citizens. To publicize the plight of the homeless and to provide homeless individuals with a means for soliciting charitable contributions, the Coalition publishes a periodic newspaper called The Homeless Grapevine. The Grapevine is distributed exclusively by homeless and destitute individuals who obtain copies of the paper from the Coalition for ten cents each and then offer them to passers-by on public sidewalks for a suggested donation of one dollar. The distributors may retain all of the donations they receive.

The Mosque is a nonprofit membership organization affiliated with the Nation of Islam. Its members disseminate the Nation of Islam's religious and political beliefs by selling copies of a newspaper known as The Final Call. Members sell the newspapers on public sidewalks for one dollar per copy. Of the one dollar they collect for each copy of the paper, members retain thirty cents, remitting the remainder to the Mosque. In addition, members must donate fifty dollars a month to the Mosque. Plaintiffs Clements and Hill have been arrested in the past for distributing the Grapevine and Final Call without peddler's licenses.

On September 27, 1994, plaintiffs brought this action in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, challenging the license fee ordinance under both the United States and Ohio constitutions, and seeking declaratory and injunctive relief. Plaintiffs filed a motion for summary judgment, and the city filed a cross-motion for summary judgment. On May 3, 1995, the district court addressed the constitutionality of the § 675.02(c)(3) license fee requirement. Concluding that the city failed to adequately articulate a purpose for its peddlers' ordinance, the court characterized the license fee as a flat tax which serves only "to defray the expenses of the licensing provision itself." Northeast Ohio Coalition for the Homeless v. City of Cleveland, 885 F.Supp. 1029, 1033 (N.D.Ohio 1995). Relying upon Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105, 63 S.Ct. 870, 87 L.Ed. 1292 (1943), and Follett v. Town of McCormick, S.C., 321 U.S. 573, 64 S.Ct. 717, 88 L.Ed. 938 (1944), the court concluded that the fee constituted an impermissible prior restraint on speech under both the United States and Ohio constitutions. 885

F.Supp. at 1034. Accordingly, the district court granted plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment, denying the city's cross-motion for summary judgment and permanently enjoining the enforcement of § 675.02(c)(3).

On August 18, 1995, the district court awarded plaintiffs attorney's fees in the amount of $15,628. The city filed timely appeals from both orders.

II.

The city contends that the fifty dollar license fee is a reasonable fee which serves to defray the expenses associated with administering an otherwise valid ordinance, and thus does not violate either the United States or Ohio constitutions. Since the facts of this case are not in dispute, we review the district court's grant of plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment and denial of the city's cross-motion for summary judgment de novo. Pinney Dock & Transp. Co. v. Penn Cent. Corp., 838 F.2d 1445, 1472 (6th Cir.1988).

A. First Amendment

It is well-settled that solicitations to pay or contribute money to charity involve a variety of speech interests and are generally entitled to protection under the First Amendment. See Riley v. Nat'l Fed'n of the Blind of North Carolina, Inc., 487 U.S. 781, 788-89, 108 S.Ct. 2667, 2673-74, 101 L.Ed.2d 669 (1988); Secretary of State of Maryland v. Joseph H. Munson Co., 467 U.S. 947, 959-60, 104 S.Ct. 2839, 2848-49, 81 L.Ed.2d 786 (1984); Village of Schaumburg v. Citizens for a Better Environment, 444 U.S. 620, 632, 100

S.Ct. 826, 833-34, 63 L.Ed.2d 73 (1980). It is equally clear that while the government may not tax the exercise of constitutionally protected activities, it may restrict the exercise of such activities by "reasonable time, place, and manner regulations as long as the restrictions 'are content-neutral, are narrowly tailored to serve a significant government interest, and leave open ample alternative channels of communication.' " United States v. Grace, 461 U.S. 171, 177, 103 S.Ct. 1702, 1707, 75 L.Ed.2d 736 (1983) (quoting Perry Educ. Ass'n v. Perry Local Educators' Ass'n, 460 U.S. 37, 45, 103 S.Ct. 948, 955, 74 L.Ed.2d 794 (1983)). The Supreme Court's decisions in Cox v. New Hampshire, 312 U.S. 569, 61 S.Ct. 762, 85 L.Ed. 1049 (1941), Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105, 63 S.Ct. 870, 87 L.Ed. 1292 (1943), and Forsyth County v. Nationalist Movement, 505 U.S. 123, 112 S.Ct. 2395, 120 L.Ed.2d 101 (1992), demonstrate these principles in the context of license fee requirements. In Cox, the Supreme Court considered the constitutionality of a state statute requiring marchers to obtain licenses and to prepay fees of no more than three hundred dollars a day before they could parade on public streets. In upholding the validity of the state statute, the Supreme Court held that the license fee did not offend the marchers' First Amendment rights because it was not a revenue tax, but rather a means to defray the expenses incident to the administration of the statute, and to the maintenance of public order during licensed parades. 312 U.S. at 577, 61 S.Ct. at 766. In reaching its conclusion, the Court noted that "[t]here is no evidence that the statute has been administered otherwise than in the fair and nondiscriminatory manner which the state court has construed it to require." Id.

In Murdock, decided two years after Cox, a religious group attacked the constitutionality of a city ordinance which required it to pay a flat license fee as a condition to conducting its distribution activities. The Supreme Court struck down the ordinance as unconstitutional because the license fee was essentially "a flat tax imposed on the exercise of a privilege granted by the Bill of Rights." Murdock, 319 U.S. at 113, 63 S.Ct. at 875. In referring to the ordinance, the Court stated:

> [T]he issuance of the permit or license is dependent on the payment of a license tax. And the tax is fixed in amount and unrelated to the scope of the activities of petitioners or to their realized revenues. It is not a nominal fee imposed as a regulatory measure to defray the expenses of policing the activities in question.

Id. at 113-14, 63 S.Ct. at 875. The Supreme Court distinguished the state statute it upheld in Cox, stating that unlike the statute in Cox, the ordinance challenged in Murdock was not a "state regulation of the streets to protect and insure the safety, comfort, or convenience of the public," and the license fee "[was] not a nominal one, imposed as a regulatory measure and calculated to defray the expenses of protecting those on the streets and at home against the abuses of solicitors." Id. at 116, 63 S.Ct. at 876.

The lesson to be gleaned from Cox and Murdock is that an ordinance requiring a person to pay a license or permit fee before he can engage in a constitutionally protected activity does not violate the Constitution so long as the purpose of charging the fee is limited to defraying expenses incurred in furtherance of a legitimate state interest. In Forsyth County, 505 U.S. at 123, 112 S.Ct. at 2397-98, the Supreme Court appended an important limitation to a government's ability to recover such expenses. There, the Court found unconstitutional a city ordinance which required private groups to pay a license fee as a condition to engaging in demonstrations on public lands. The amount of the license fee was to be fixed by the county's Board of Commissioners "in order to meet the expense incident to the administration of the Ordinance and to the maintenance of public order in the matter licensed," but the fee was not to exceed one thousand dollars per day. Id. at 126-27, 112 S.Ct. at 2399-2400. The Court concluded that the ordinance was not content-neutral because "[t]he fee assessed will depend on the administrator's measure of the amount of hostility likely to be created by the speech based on its content." Id. at 134, 112 S.Ct. at 2403.

In the present case, the district court held that the peddlers' licensing ordinance constitutes an impermissible prior restraint on speech because the fifty dollar license fee is not "tied to defraying the expenses of administering a valid regulatory scheme, [given that] the only regulation whose expenses it defrays is that requiring payment of the fee." 885 F.Supp. at 1034. We are unable to agree with the court's characterization of the purpose underlying the ordinance and the license fee. This court has previously referred to the "compelling governmental interest in preventing fraudulent solicitations of the very individuals most disposed to contribute financial support in response to pleas for donations." Dayton Area Visually Impaired Persons, Inc. v. Fisher, 70 F.3d 1474, 1482 (6th Cir.1995), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 116 S.Ct. 1421, 134 L.Ed.2d 545 (1996). In addition, the city has an interest in giving its citizens some assurance that it can identify and pursue peddlers who do engage in fraudulent or unlawful conduct. This ordinance, by requiring street peddlers to register with the city and wear identification cards while they are engaged in peddling, furthers the aforementioned interests, and the administrative costs incident to the implementation of an ordinance embodying compelling governmental interests are defrayed by the fee.

Plaintiffs argue that a license fee which serves to defray the expenses of administrating an ordinance that encroaches on First Amendment rights is permissible only if the fee is nominal in amount. They rely upon Murdock, 319 U.S. at 116, 63 S.Ct. at 876, for this proposition. We have previously addressed this precise issue in Stonewall Union v. City of Columbus, 931 F.2d 1130 (6th Cir.1991). In that case, we upheld a Columbus ordinance that required applicants for parade permits to pay an eighty-five dollar fee. We specifically held that a more than nominal permit fee is constitutionally permissible so long as the fee is "reasonably related to the expenses incident to the administration of the ordinance and to the maintenance of public safety and order." Id. at 1136. In the present case, the parties do not dispute that in 1989, the city's cost of administering the peddlers' licensing ordinance was forty-three dollars per permit. Moreover, there is no evidence that the fees were charged for any reason other than to defray the costs of administering the ordinance. Thus, the fifty dollar fee is neither unreasonable, nor excessive.

Like the regulations upheld in Cox and Stonewall, Cleveland's peddlers' ordinance and the license fee it imposes are narrowly tailored to further a legitimate governmental interest. The fee is reasonably related to the costs of administering the ordinance, and the licensing program helps to prevent fraud by solicitors. In addition, the program enables the city to offer some protection to individuals who donate money to street peddlers. Moreover, unlike the fee in Forsyth County, the fifty dollar license fee in this case is content-neutral – all peddlers must pay it regardless of the source and nature of the products they peddle. Accordingly, the city's fee does not unduly or impermissibly burden plaintiffs' First Amendment rights.

Consequently, we hold that the license fee imposed by Cleveland's peddlers' ordinance is a constitutionally permissible time, place, and manner regulation of expressive conduct.

B. Ohio Constitution

Article I, § 11 of the Ohio Constitution provides in part: "no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech, or of the press." In Eastwood Mall, Inc., v. Slanco, 68 Ohio St.3d 221, 222, 626 N.E.2d 59, 61 (1994), the Ohio Supreme Court reiterated that the protections afforded by this clause extend no further than those provided under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. Since the license fee required by Cleveland's peddlers' ordinance does not constitute an impermissible prior restraint of speech under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution, the ordinance does not run afoul of the Ohio Constitution.

Accordingly, the district court erred in granting plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment, and in permanently enjoining enforcement of the ordinance. Moreover, the district court erred in denying the city's cross-motion for summary judgment.

III.

The city further argues that the district court erred in awarding plaintiffs attorney's fees under 42 U.S.C. § 1988. In view of our disposition of this appeal, plaintiffs are not "prevailing parties" as contemplated by § 1988; they are therefore not entitled to attorney's fees.

IV.

For the reasons stated above, the district court's order granting summary judgment to plaintiffs, denying defendant's cross-motion for summary judgment, and permanently enjoining the enforcement of Cleveland Codified Ordinance § 675.02(c)(3) is reversed, and this case is remanded with instructions to enter summary judgment in favor of the city. Furthermore, the district court's order awarding plaintiffs attorney's fees under 42 U.S.C. § 1988 is reversed.

NORTHEAST OHIO COALITION FOR THE HOMELESS, et al., Plaintiffs,

v.

CITY OF CLEVELAND, Defendant.

No. 1:94CV2008,
United States District Court,
N.D. Ohio,
Eastern Division.

May 3, 1995.

Nonprofit organizations challenged constitutionality of city ordinance requiring payment of $50 license fee for all peddlers distributing literature in exchange for money. The District Court, Aldrich, J., held that imposition of a flat license tax on the dissemination of religious literature in public by solicitors who seek a donation in return for publication violates the First Amendment as a prior restraint on protected speech.

Motion for summary judgment granted.

Sharon Sobol Jordon, Charles E. Hannan, Jr., City of Cleveland, Dept. of Law, Cleveland, OH, for defendant.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

ALDRICH, District Judge.

The Northeast Ohio Coalition for the Homeless (the "Coalition"), Richard Clements, Fruit of Islam of Muhammad's Mosque No. 18 (the "Mosque"), and Steven D. Hill

(collectively "plaintiffs") bring this action pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983, 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a), and the Ohio Constitution, against the City of Cleveland. The complaint challenges the constitutionality of Cleveland's Codified Ordinances § 675.02(c)(3). This Court has jurisdiction over the federal question, and supplemental jurisdiction over the state constitutional claim. Both sides have moved for summary judgment. For the reasons discussed below, the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment is granted and the defendant's motion is denied.

I.

The undisputed and material facts follow.

The Coalition is a non-profit organization whose asserted purpose is to address the needs of homeless citizens. To this end, it publishes The Homeless Grapevine to publicize the plight of the homeless and to solicit charitable contributions for the sustenance of homeless individuals. The homeless and destitute people who distribute the paper acquire their copies from the Coalition for $.10 each. They then offer them to passers-by on public sidewalks, for a suggested donation of $1.00. The distributors retain all funds they receive in this fashion.

The Mosque is a non-profit membership organization. Its members propagate the Nation of Islam's religious and political paper, The Final Call. Distributors sell, on city sidewalks, copies of the paper for $1.00 each; they retain $.30 of this amount, and remit the remainder to the Mosque. Because members of the Mosque are expected to donate an additional $50.00 a month to the Mosque, distributors earn only a subsistence living through distribution of the paper.

The City of Cleveland requires all "peddlers" to obtain a permit, which requires payment of a $50.00 fee in advance. The Coalition, most of its distributors, and most Final Call distributors are financially unable to pay this fee. In fact, the Coalition will be unable to distribute its publication in Cleveland if the city continues to enforce the challenged ordinance. Richard Clements and Steven Hill, distributors of The Homeless Grapevine and The Final Call, respectively, have been arrested at least once for disseminating their respective publications without the required license. Hill, in fact, has been prosecuted several times for violation of the city's ordinance.

In 1989, the administrative cost of Cleveland's peddler registration system was $43.00, apparently per permit issued. These costs were allocated as follows:

Application process:	$ 7.64
Supervisory costs:	$26.74
License issuance:	$ 2.25
Miscellaneous Paper Costs:	$ .28
Annual Field Maintenance:	$ 6.09
TOTAL:	$43.00

The City offers no further explanation of the costs associated with its licensing system.

II.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c) governs summary judgment motions and provides:

> The judgment sought shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law . . .

Rule 56(e) specifies the materials properly submitted in connection with a motion for summary judgment:

> Supporting and opposing affidavits shall be made on personal knowledge, shall set forth such facts as would be admissible in evidence, and shall show affirmatively that the affiant is competent to testify to the matters stated therein . . . The court may permit affidavits to be supplemented or opposed by depositions, answers to interrogatories, or further affidavits. When a motion for summary judgment is made and supported as provided in this rule, an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denial of the adverse party's pleading, but the adverse party's response, by affidavits or as otherwise provided in this rule, must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial. If the adverse party does not so respond, summary judgment, if appropriate, shall be entered against the adverse party.

However, the movant is not required to file affidavits or other similar materials negating a claim on which its opponent bears the burden of proof, so long as the movant relies upon the absence of the essential element in the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986).

In reviewing summary judgment motions, this Court must view the evidence in a light most favorable to the non-moving party to determine whether a genuine issue of material fact exists. Adickes v. S.H. Kress & Co., 398 U.S. 144, 90 S.Ct. 1598, 26 L.Ed.2d 142 (1970); White v. Turfway Park Racing Assn., Inc., 909 F.2d 941, 943-44 (6th Cir.1990). A fact is "material" only if its resolution will affect the outcome of the lawsuit. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248, 106 S.Ct. 2505, 2510, 91 L.Ed.2d 202 (1986). Determination of whether a factual issue is "genuine" requires consideration of the applicable evidentiary standards. Thus, in most civil cases the Court must decide "whether reasonable jurors could find by a preponderance of the evidence that the [non-moving party] is entitled to a verdict." Id. at 252, 106 S.Ct. at 2512.

III.

Cleveland Codified Ordinances § 675.01(a)(2) provides:

> "Peddling" means selling, bartering, or offering or exposing for sale or barter any goods, wares, merchandise, menial tasks, such as painting numbers on curbs, food or beverages from, in, upon, along, or through the highways, streets, or sidewalks of the City, or in the open air or from a temporary shelter or vending device upon private property in the City.

The term "peddler" includes a "solicitor." C.C.O. § 675.01(a)(3). Section 675.02(a) prohibits the practice of peddling without a license. Section 675.02(c)(3) requires every person seeking to obtain a license to pay a $50.00 annual fee. The plaintiffs here challenge the imposition of this license under both the federal and Ohio constitutions. Each of these issues is addressed below.

A. Imposition of a flat license tax on the dissemination of religious literature in public by solicitors who seek a donation in return for the publication violates the first amendment as a prior restraint on protected speech. Murdock v. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105, 63 S.Ct. 870, 87 L.Ed. 1292 (1943); and Follett v. Town of McCormick, S.C., 321 U.S. 573, 64 S.Ct. 717, 88 L.Ed. 938 (1944). The charitable solicitation of funds in general is speech wholly within the scope of first amendment protection. Village of Schaumburg v. Citizens For A Better Environment, 444 U.S. 620, 632, 100 S.Ct. 826, 833, 63 L.Ed.2d 73 (1980). In reaching its conclusion, the Murdock court noted that "[t]he power to tax the exercise of a privilege is the power to control or suppress its enjoyment." Murdock, 319 U.S. at 112, 63 S.Ct. at 874. The Court distinguished a flat tax or license fee, imposed on the distribution of a publication, from "a nominal fee imposed as a regulatory measure to defray the expenses of policing the activities in question," and from a fee that is apportioned. Id., at 113-114, 63 S.Ct. at 875.

A fee limited to the expense incident to the administration of a regulatory provision and to the "maintenance of public order in the matter licensed" does not offend the first amendment where the regulatory provision itself is constitutional. Cox v. State of New Hampshire, 312 U.S. 569, 577, 61 S.Ct. 762, 766, 85 L.Ed. 1049 (1941). In Cox, the Supreme Court upheld a $300 permit fee applied to requests for permission to conduct a parade or march. The Court made clear that its decision turned on the power of the state to regulate its highways against the harms caused by spontaneous marches, and to defray the expense of that regulation. Id., at 574-575, 61 S.Ct. at 765. The Court noted that the marchers were not charged for distributing leaflets, and expressly refused to consider whether their rights to disseminate written materials were implicated by the imposition of a fee for a parade permit. Id., at 571-575, 61 S.Ct. at 764-765.

The Court recently considered its decisions in Murdock and Follett in the context of a generally applicable sales and use tax imposed on the distribution of religious materials by a religious organization. Jimmy Swaggart Ministries v. Board of Equalization of California, 493 U.S. 378, 110 S.Ct. 688, 107 L.Ed.2d 796 (1990). The Court there upheld against first amendment challenge a sales tax when imposed on the receipts from sales of religious materials. The Court reconciled this decision with Murdock and Follett in holding that those decisions invalidated only flat licensing taxes that operated as prior restraints. Id., at 389, 110 S.Ct. at 695. Because the tax at issue in Jimmy Swaggart Ministries was not imposed at the time of registration, it did not constitute a prior restraint. Id., at 390-391, 110 S.Ct. at 696. In addition, the tax was apportioned, unlike that at issue in Murdock and Follett, because it was tied to the realized receipts from the sales of the material in question. Id.

Most of the subsequent federal cases addressing the imposition of fees as a prerequisite to permission to distribute leaflets in public have held that such fees are invalid under Murdock and Follett. See, e.g., Holy Spirit Association for the Unification of World Christianity v. Hodge, 582 F.Supp. 592 (N.D.Tx.1984) (permit fee applied to solicitations of charitable contribution and posting of fidelity bond as prerequisite to registration of soliciting organization held unconstitutional); and Gall v. Lawler, 322 F.Supp. 1223 (E.D.Wisc.1971) (imposition of licensing fee on distribution of newspaper held invalid because, inter alia, it constitutes a prior restraint).

Cleveland points to several cases in which licensing fees were permitted in various contexts in support of the proposition that, so long as such fees are related to defraying the administrative expense associated with regulation, they are constitutionally permissible. Representative of these cases are Jimmy Swaggart Ministries; Bright Lights Inc. v. City of Newport, 830 F.Supp. 378 (E.D.Ky.1993); and Center For Auto Safety, Inc. v. Athey, 37 F.3d 139 (4th Cir.1994) None of these decisions is applicable to the facts before this Court.

As discussed above, Jimmy Swaggart Ministries approved a sales and use tax on the receipts from sales of religious literature. Unlike the fee imposed here and in Murdock and Follett, that tax did not constitute a prior restraint on expression and it was apportioned to the target's ability to pay. Jimmy Swaggart Ministries is simply inapposite here.

The court in Bright Lights Inc. upheld against first amendment challenge a tax imposed on bars at which nude dancing was performed. The court found that the license fee was incident to defraying the administrative costs of regulating the secondary effects of such establishments, such as the increase in prostitution and related crimes near the establishments in question.

This tax is clearly distinguishable from the license fee here. Here, Cleveland does not maintain that its fee is directed to policing secondary effects of distribution of The Homeless Grapevine and The Final Call. Instead, Cleveland maintains that its fee is necessary to defray the expenses of the licensing provision itself. Cleveland's Memorandum In Support of Motion For Summary Judgment, at 5. This justification is wholly circular. That is, the challenged ordinance revolves around the mechanism requiring the collecting of a fee, and the city defends that mechanism as incident to defraying the costs of that same regulatory scheme. If this Court found the city's justification sufficient to survive first amendment scrutiny, Murdock and Follett would, in effect, be overruled. This is so because the Murdock and Follett decisions invalidated the process of imposing a flat fee in return for a license to disseminate material where that fee, inter alia, is a general revenue tax. Simply through the artifice of maintaining that the fee defrays the cost of collecting the fee, and is therefore not a general revenue tax but a fee necessary to defray the costs of regulation, the city would be permitted to circumvent the Murdock and Follett decisions. While the first amendment certainly countenances the imposition of nominal fees to defray the costs of permissible regulation of speech, it does not permit the avoidance of its command through the sort of bootstrapping Cleveland attempts here. Further distinguishing the Bright Lights Inc. case from that currently before this Court is the fact that the Bright Lights Inc. court did not address the prior restraint concerns that were central to the Murdock and Follett decisions.

The Fourth Circuit, in Athey, approved the imposition of a sliding-scale fee on organizations wishing to engage in charitable solicitation. Athey, 37 F.3d at 145. The size of the fee was based on the level of the organization's charitable contributions. The purpose of this fee was to defray the costs of a regulatory scheme aimed at the prevention of fraud by charitable organizations. Id. This case is inapposite to the dispute here for two reasons. First, the fee at issue in Athey was apportioned through its sliding-scale mechanism. This apportionment was central to the court's holding that the fee satisfied the requirements of Murdock and Follett as understood by the Jimmy Swaggart Ministries court. Second, the regulatory scheme, the costs of which the fee was directed toward defraying, was directed at combating a specific regulatory problem – the prevention of fraud – while that at issue here is not.

Cleveland also points to a recent Second Circuit decision in support of its position. See National Awareness Foundation v. Abrams, 50 F.3d 1159 (2nd Cir.1995).[1] There, the court upheld imposition of a flat fee on charitable organizations that employed professional solicitors. However, the parties did not dispute the constitutionality of such a fee. Id., at 1163-1164. Thus, the court did not address the question at issue here, but rather addressed the question whether such a fee, assuming its constitutionality, could be imposed not merely to defray administrative costs but also to defray the costs of enforcing the regulatory scheme pursuant to which the fee was imposed. In answering this question in the affirmative, the court did no more than reject the distinction between costs tied to the administration of a regulation and those tied to its enforcement. Id., at 1165-1166. In any event, to the extent that the Abrams decision can be read to hold that the imposition of a fee to defray the costs merely of collecting the fee is constitutional, this Court rejects such a holding as contrary to Murdock, Follett, and Jimmy Swaggart Ministries.

Here, the ordinance in question imposes a $50 fee on all "peddlers" who seek to distribute literature in return for money. Cleveland does not dispute that the Coalition's and the Mosque's individual distributors are unable to afford the license fee, nor does the city dispute that the Coalition cannot afford to procure a license on behalf of all its distributors. In any event, the city does not challenge the plaintiffs' standing to attack the constitutionality of the ordinance on this ground even were all the plaintiffs able to afford the licensing fee.[2] Cleveland offers nothing to suggest that the fee defrays the expense of any regulatory system other than that imposing the fee itself. That is, the fee is justified as necessary to defray the cost of collecting the fee and issuing a permit after the fee is paid.

The ordinance is constitutionally infirm not only because it is not tied to the peddler's ability to pay – and thus serves to prevent at least some individuals, such as the Coalition and Richard Clements – from distributing their messages, but also because it is a prior restraint on speech. This prior restraint is not constitutionally permissible as a fee tied to defraying the expenses of administering a valid regulatory scheme, because the only regulation whose expenses it defrays is that requiring payment of the fee.

[2] A plaintiff whose first amendment rights are not violated by a particular provision may nonetheless challenge the law on overbreadth grounds "by showing that it substantially abridges the first amendment rights of other parties not before the court." Village of Schaumburg v. Citizens For A Better Environment, 444 U.S. 620, 634, 100 S.Ct. 826, 834, 63 L.Ed.2d 73 (1980).

Therefore, there are no issues of material fact in dispute and the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment in their favor as a matter of law on count one of their complaint.

B. Article I, § 11 of the Ohio constitution provides in pertinent part: "no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech, or of the press." "[T]he free speech guarantees accorded by the Ohio Constitution are no broader than the First Amendment, and . . . the First Amendment is the proper basis for interpretation of Section 11, Article I of the Ohio Constitution." Eastwood Mall, Inc. v. Slanco, 68 Ohio St.3d 221, 626 N.E.2d 59, 61 (1994). Thus, the foregoing analysis with respect to the first amendment is applicable with respect to the Ohio constitutional claim as well. See, e.g., City of Bowling Green v. Lodico, 11 Ohio St.2d 135, 228 N.E.2d 325 (1967) (invalidating, under federal and Ohio constitutions, ordinance requiring solicitor to obtain license for a fee before selling magazine on sidewalks, both because city official possessed unfettered discretion in issuing license and because imposition of fee constituted impermissible prior restraint).

Consequently, for the reasons discussed in section III.A. above, there are no disputed issues of material fact and the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on count two of their complaint.

IV.

This Court finds that no material facts remain in dispute and that the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment as a matter of law on both counts of their complaint. Accordingly, the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment is granted and the defendant's motion for summary judgment is denied. This Court enters judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, declares that Cleveland Codified Ordinances § 675.02(c)(3) violates both the first amendment to the United States constitution and Article I, section 11 of the Ohio constitution, and permanently enjoins its enforcement.

Within ten days of the date of this order, the plaintiffs shall submit any motion for attorneys' fees, including all materials in support of such a motion. The city may respond within ten days of the plaintiffs' filing.

IT IS SO ORDERED.
